Indigo Homework on Demand

At Indigo, we understand our students have busy schedules. That's why we don't assign compulsory homework. Different schools emphasise different parts of the English exam, so we believe students should focus on what matters most to them.

Having mandatory homework would leave some students clueless in class if they didn't finish it. Not being able to choose which areas to practice would also prevent students from strengthening their weaker skills or focusing on their school's priorities.

However, homework should be meaningful. It should help students revise what they've learnt, improve weak areas, and prepare for tests. Here are some options for students to choose relevant homework:

1. As an enrolled student, you will be added in the Indigo's community whatsapp group. On a weekly basis, you will receive a summary of what has been covered in class and what you can do for revision.

Introduction

Conservatism is the commitment to traditional values, beliefs, and practices. Adherents of conservatism are opposed to radical changes and innovations that threaten the traditions they so deeply cherish.

We must first understand that there is not a single brand of conservatism; instead, it exists on a spectrum ranging from extreme to mild. Some are completely sceptical about change, while others desire only gradual change. With that in mind, it would be prudent for us to not merely classify any country as just conservative or progressive, but to also consider the degree of conservatism (how much) that exists in a society.

Furthermore, conservatism is not unique to Asian societies (they do exist in non-Asian countries). However, worldviews distinct to the Asian culture make it more likely for an Asian to subscribe to conservatism because of the philosophical overlaps they share. Asian countries like Singapore are heavily influenced by Confucianism, which espouses, among other things, filial piety, reverence for authority, and the forgoing of personal freedom for the sake of the collective good. As these beliefs align with conservative ideals of communitarianism and reverence for customary beliefs, people have come to generalise most Asian cultures as conservative cultures.

With these points in mind, let us move to consider why Singapore is seen – by Singaporeans and others abroad – as an Asian, conservative society.
